Bonn Summit Seeks Compromise on Trade

By Axel Krause

BONN - The seven-nation Bonn economic summit, deadlocked over trade and monetary issues, sought compromise solutions Friday to overcome obstacles to global trade talks promoted by the United States.

In the meantime, the participants - the United States and its six major Western allies - issued a political declaration giving firm backing to U.S. positions at arms talks with the Soviet Union.

On the economic front, President François Mitterrand of France firmly opposed the U.S. administration's strong desire to begin global trade negotiations early in 1986 on the grounds that such talks must be adequately prepared and should include the developing countries, many of which are either lukewarm or opposed to the talks. They would be conducted under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, a 90-member body based in Geneva. But compromise proposals on trade and monetary reform issues surfaced Friday afternoon. Likely to be negotiated throughout the night before the end of the summit on Saturday, they raised the possibility that the summit, which earlier appeared headed for failure, might prove to be a partial success.

There is room for negotiating but it is too early to say what might result," Michel Vauzelle, Mr. Mitterrand's spokesman, said late Fri-summit from endorsing a definite date because decisions at such meetings must be unanimous. He was supported in his opposition by Prime Minister Bettino Craxi of Italy and Jacques Delors, his for-mer finance minister who is attending the summit as president of the European Commission.

BONN - President Ronald Reagan, promoting Western support for his space arms program, has pledged not to "go it alone" and decide on deployment without consulting U.S. allies and holding discussions with the Soviet Union.

Mr. Kohl, in apparent enthusiasm for the project, said that he was receptive to it and that he wanted to try to achieve a joint European approach on cooperating with Washington. But Mr. Shultz, summing up the day's conversations, was more cautious about the prospects. "Some want to participate in it; others are studying it; others probably won't," he said.

Reassuring the Japanese prime minister, Mr. Reagan appeared to go further than before in pledging, as one American participant put il, that "we don't intend to go it alone as far as deployment is concerned" and make a decision on deployment without the "closest of consultations with our allies" and without negotiations and discussions with the Soviet Union.

According to George H. Stein, a U.S. historian and author of the book "The Waffen SS: Hitler's Elite Guard at War," the Death's Head Division was set up as a com-bat force in 1939 around a group of about 6,500 former concentration camp guards. Hitler set up the SS - for Schutzstaffel, or guard unit - in the 1920s as a ragtag bodyguard to protect Nazi leaders in street marches and sometimes turbulent demonstrations. Its real importance, however, began in 1929 with the appointment of Heinrich Himmler, then 28, as its leader.

Under Himmler the SS grew rapidly, assuming many police functions and gaining a reputation for ruthlessness. With the outbreak of World War II, its combat arm, the Waffen SS, was forged into crack tank and infantry divisions.

Civil rights groups and Jewish organizations, citing the Nuremberg war crimes tribunal, which branded the SS a "criminal organization," and subsequent West German legislation banning the use of signs and symbols relating to Nazism, have hounded the veterans. making their annual gatherings the targets of violent demonstrations in recent years.

Legionnaire's Disease Kills 27 in U.K.

STAFFORD, England (Reuters) - The first major outbreak of Le ionnaire's disease in Britain was confirmed Friday after 27 people died in what doctors had been treating as an influenza epidemic.

A spokesman for Mid-Staffordshire Health Authority in central England said that 12 cases of the disease had been identified among the 27 people who died and 70 who have been infected.

Legionnaire's disease, a form of pneumonia, was first recognized in 1976 in the United States when 29 persons died from an outbreak at an American Legion convention in Philadelphia.

Britain's Tories Suffer Big Loss in Local Voting :

LONDON -- Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's ruling Conservatives have suffered major losses in the biggest electoral test since the British leader won a sec-

The centrist Liberal-Social Democratic Alliance gained seats at the expense mostly of the Conserva-tives but also of Labor. With 45 of the 47 results de-

Republicans End Walkout In House as Tempers Cool

By Margaret Shapiro
Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - House Reublicans, who staged a walkout on Wednesday over the seating of Frank X. McCloskey, a Democrat as the representative from Indiana's 8th Congressional District, have returned to their seats but continued parliamentary stalling tactics to show their displeasure with the Democratic majority. However, tempers seemed to have cooled somewhat on Thursday and the disruptions were milder than they had been during the last two weeks when the Democrats at times were forced to adjourn the House in frustration. On Thursday, House Republi-cans allowed debate to begin on the State Department authorization bill for fiscal 1986, which had been pulled from the floor five times in the last two weeks because of the partisan crossfire. Enactment of the bill was requested by the Reagan administration. Republican lawmakers said Thursday that once the Indiana seating dispute was settled they had no intention of jeopardizing the administration's legislative agenda. In addition, their floor tactics are likely to occur less frequently from now on, in order "to keep the other side guessing," one Republican official said. The Republicans began a war of words and parliamentary maneuvers against the Democrats two weeks ago, after a House task force with a Democratic majority ruled that Mr. McCloskey, the incum-bent, had won the Indiana congressional race last November by four votes over Richard D. McIntyre, a Foreign bankers said the government's handling of the strikes would clarify whether Mr. Sarney gives greater priority to fighting inflation or to seeking popularity to consolidate his political base.

In a nationwide address Tuesday night. Mr. Sarney announced a doubling of the minimum wage to around $60 a month -as part of a biannual adjustment. But he also cautioned that recovery of lost purchasing power by the country's poor would have to be gradual to avoid exacerbating inflation, which reached 230 percent last year.

Having committed itself to combating inflation, the government was cheered by news this week that the general price index rose by only 7.2 percent in April, its lowest monthly rate in almost two years. But this was due in part to price controls imposed by the new government, and economists forecast that the latest wage increa bring a higher rate soon.

The French Argument

Peru's Fragile Democracy

Sweden's Nuclear Tests

The French have an important point: There is a direct connection between international trade and currency exchange rates. It is hard to talk about one without taking account of the other. But that is not quite an argument for trying to reform the world's monetary system.

as the French government proposes.

At the Bonn summit meeting, President Reagan pressed for a world trade conference next year to begin another round of disman-tling the array of national laws that restrict commerce. It is a good idea. The increase in trade across national boundaries has been a constant contributor to economic growth since World War II, and this kind of conference is periodically necessary to keep the process going In response, President François Mitterrand of France said he wanted a monetary conference "in the same process" to tie the European, Japanese and American currencies more closely together.

The United States supports both conferences, but it opposes any formal link between them. The reason is that substantial progress is altogether possible on the trade issues, but probably not on exchange rates. This is not because governments do not like fixed exchange rates; the world used them until the early 1970s, and commerce flourished. They were eventually destroyed by prosperity and by the rapid increases in the amounts of private money moving from country to country. By the 1970s, the flows of private capital were large enough to swamp governments' attempts at intervention. For the past dozen years, the rates have been set mainly by the daily buying and selling among banks and brokers in the currency markets. The Reagan administration is quite right when it says that not even the U.S. government has the resources to move those markets very far.

The fact that the American dollar is danger ously overvalued has little to do with the structure of the monetary system. The causes go back to the huge U.S. budget deficits.

But there is a way to make exchange rates more stable, and such stability would benefit every trading country in the world. If governments can learn to coordinate their economic policies - and that is the purpose of meetings such as the one in Bonn — then exchange rates naturally will settle into a more predictable and dependable pattern. That has been demonstrated by the great success of the European Monetary System, in which France and West Germany are the major partners.

Closer cooperation would require the Americans to bring their budget deficits down and the Europeans to push their growth rates up. Stable exchange rates are the result of good policy - not a substitute for it.

Sadly, this also applies to the outgoing civil-reality. A small sample of death. Twenty million Soviet people died. The figure translates into spouses, parents, and now grandparents. Of all the men born in 1922 and sent to the front, only 3 percent survived. The figure translates into a genera-tion of 20-year-old widows, now 60vear-old widows. Among the older people, these memories are vivid. Just this morning, Vasilisa-Kulik Emezova, a warm, engaging Leningrad grandmother who lived through the siege, talked to me in the rhythmic cadences of a practiced storyteller about the winter of 1942. For seven months, she remembers, people lived on a ration of 125 grams (4.4 ounces) of bread a day. Young girls brought food raown. Some of these girls brought back the live babies they found in the arms of the dead parents.

We should instead remind ourselves just why the war was fought and what it was supposed to achieve. The goal was the liberation of Europe and the possibility of spreading de-mocracy throughout the world. But the result was as much the loss of freedom in Eastern Europe as a recla-

The war produced the defeat of Nazism, but it also resurrected Stalin's totali-We must also put to rest the myth that we could not have won the war without the help of the Soviet Union. To begin with, we must not forget that in 1939 Stalin concluded an odious pact with Hitler that allowed him to gain dominion over half of Poland once Hitler attacked it. Then, on June 21, 1941, when Hitler attacked the Soviet Union, Winston Churchill asked that all Hitler's foes assist Moscow — but even this avowed foe of Bolshevism failed to ask that we impose conditions. Thus, the Western Allies did not insist that Stalin give up land gained though the pact with the Nazis or that Poland be guaranteed independence. Certainly, Hitler faced consider-

W ASHINGTON — The Western able obstacles in the Soviet Union — its vast territory, its industrial potential and the patriotism Stalin was able to call on. Yet even so, it is unlikely that Stalin would have defeated Hitler without the money, food and am-munition he received through the American Lend-Lease program.

Beyond this, let us not forget that even at the height of the war, Stalin made overtures to his old comrade Hitler. (That Hitler did not respond does nothing to exonerate Stalin.) Let us not forget that even today, Soviet history books point to World War II as "the Great Patriotic War" — with nary a mention of the Soviet Union's allies or the reason that we were determined to defeat the Nazis.

True, the Russian people paid a horrible price for Hitler's invasion — and for Stalin's folly and ambition but in the end Hitler was defeated primarily by American industrial and economic power. We should celebrate V-E Day, but we must stop perpetuating myths.

The Soviet Union's victory over Nazism was the triumph of one totalitarian state over another — and the result, for millions of East Europeans, was merely the substitution of one set of chains for another. That is nothing to celebrate.

The writer, a professor of political science at American University, contributed this to The New York Times.

Putting the Squeeze on Nicaragua

WASHINGTON — Having failed to convince Congress to approve military aid to the Nicaragnan rebels, the Reagan administration has used its executive powers to impose a trade embargo. This is a hasty, foolish step. Trade sanctions are unlikely to moderate or topple the Sandinists and could produce reactions are unlikely to moderate or topple the sandinists and extensive political or-Sandinists and could produce reac-tions contrary to U.S. interests.

The embargo seems to be more the result of domestic politics than for-eign policy calculation. The White House was piqued at Congress's de-nial of aid to the "contras" and seized on the suggestion from Democrats that economic pressures would be preferable to military ones. Yet the administration ignored many Demobargo should be considered only after a period of negotiations and should not be imposed without the support of other countries in the region.

Second, the objectives of the em-bargo are unclear. If the purpose is to strengthen middle-class opposition within Nicaragua and to loosen Ma-nagua's ties to Moscow, a blockade is hardly likely to be effective. On the contrary, it will bankrupt firms in the still significant private sector and probably compel the Sandinists to tighten their grip on the economy. The Russians, who have been cautions in increasing their economic presence, will be tempted to do more, if, on the other hand, the adminis-

In fact, the embargo could harm U.S. interests. A New U.S. Recession? Verdict Is Mixed

By Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON — Is the American economy go-ing to slip into a recession, a "growth recession," or some other form of downturn? At the economic summit in Bonn, President Reagan and his aides have had to admit to recent disappointments, but they have staunchly denied that a recession is likely.

Others are hopeful, but not so sanguine. Preston Martin, the vice chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, said in a thoughtful speech recently that "a growth recession" - that is, slow growth, accompanied by rising unemployment — must be considered a real threat. The data currently available suggest that the economy is on the edge between healthy, sustainable growth, and a growth recession," he said.

Mr. Martin added that if the Commerce Department is roughly correct in its estimate of 1.25-percent first-quarter growth of the gross national product, "the economy has advanced at only about a 2.5-percent rate in the past three quarters." The economy has been weakening since mid-1984. In the presidential campaign, even as Mr. Reagan was extolling the virtues of Reaganomics and assuring the world that the United States could "grow its way out" of the deficit, the bloom was coming off the boom. But the evidence did not show up until later.

Another sign of weakness is that despite the upsurge in 1983 and in the first half of 1984, the unemployment rate has been stuck in a 7-percent to 7.5-percent range. It now threatens to go higher, as Mr. Martin suggests, unless the economy gets a lift. Privately, this is what worries Treasury Secretary James A. Baker 3d and other administration economic officials.

Some economists do not agree with Mr. Martin about the danger of a growth recession. Monetarists who blame the current slowdown on the Federal Reserve Board's tight monetary policy from March to October 1984, predict some improvement in the economy later this year because the Fed has since eased up.
Thus, Robert J. Genetski, senior vice president of the Harris Bank of Chicago, says: "Interest rates have moved lower amid concerns over a weak economy. However, the economy is not weak. Rather it is on the verge of a period of rapid growth."

No one can doubt that the Fed's policy swings affect the economy. But perhaps a more basic factor in the slower growth of the economy since mid-1984 has been the negative impact of the overvalued dollar on U.S. manufacturing industries.

Since imports represented 14.5 percent of the value, in constant dollars, of all goods purchased last year in the United States (and that is three times the import share of 20 years ago), a sizable amount of gross national product was transferred from the United States to the nations where the goods were produced along with jobs to foreign factories.

This process is referred to as "leakage" by Rimmer de Vries, an economist with the Morgan Guaranty Bank. What he means is that the trade deficit has the effect of moving domestic demand abroad. For 1983 as a whole, 2 points of the 8.7-percent rise in domestic demand leaked abroad.

Mr. Genetski pooh-poohs the leakage theory, arguing that the money spent for imports "is available and will be used for the purchase of U.S. goods." But the Fed's Mr. Martin cites the decline in manufacturing production and the loss of jobs, and says some of this seems to be permanent. It appears that the trade deficit, exploding in the past two to three years, has finally become the main roadblock to resumed growth of the American econo-my. So long as the dollar remains high (and even the gloomy first-quarter statistics have not caused a significant tumble) American exporters are going to be at a competitive disadvantage.

If the huge American budget deficit remains untamed, the danger is that the government will find itself paralyzed: The Federal Reserve, fearing a new inflation, will be inhibited in its desire to boost domestic activity by substantially reducing interest rates. And the White House can hardly resort to fiscal stimulants when it has a budget close to $200 billion in the red.

This all points to the urgency for Congress to do something meaningful about the budget deficit, a hope piously endorsed by those at the Bonn summit. It is the one step that might encourage enough of a slide in the dollar to take the sting out of the trade deficit. But even that is unsure: The reason the dollar has stayed strong. despite the spate of weak economic reports, is that the United States still looks like a good place to invest—at least when compared to Europe.

1910: Japan's Busy Diplomats

PEKING - Early announcement of two most important diplomatic moves, greatly affecting the Far East, is confidently expected here. In official and diplomatic circles the conviction prevails that the negotiations for the new Russo-Japanese convention have passed the signature and ratification stages and will be published about the middle of the month. Well-informed Japanese picture the conven-tion in the nature of an alliance providing for complete Russo-Japanese cooperation visà-vis China, with definite understandings concerning the domination of the respective Manchurian and Mongolian spheres of influ-ence. Coincident with the publication of this convention is expected the promulgation of Japan's annexation of Corea.

1935: Revolt Ends in Philippines

MANILA - Armed troops and constabulary were patrolling the streets of this city tonight [May 3] following an armed uprising which spread to the provinces of Bulacan, Laguna and Rizal and had for its objective a march on Manila. Late today authorities announced that the revolt had been crushed and quiet restored after more than fifty rebels had been killed in skirmishes with government forces. The sharpest lighting occurred at Cabuyao, where the Sakdalista, the radical group opposed to the new Philippine constitution which would give the islands dominion status for a period of ten years prior to full independence, held the town for several hours before they were dislodged. The Manila "Herald" reports sixty dead and forty wounded in the fighting there.

An Afternoon at Bitburg

This afternoon at the Bitburg cemetery I watched an elderly German woman and man place flowers on the grave of one of the 49 SS troopers buried there: SS Panzer Grenadier Fritz Schweiberger, killed Dec. 30, 1944 Novemberger, killed Dec. 30, 194 1944. He was not a relative, she told me; she only honored a German solme; sne only nonored a German sol-dier who gave his life for his country and what he "thought was right." She is not alone in this honoring. Practically all the SS graves are marked by recent floral memorials. Germans, it seems, have come to pay their respects to the dead SS, almost to the exclusion of other "victims of Nazism" who lay buried there.

No doubt only a few have done this because of the recent notoriety. But I wonder, I do not know. I have not had the time to research the possibility that young Schweinberger acted as a member of the 1st Panzer Grenadiers of the SS who murdered

86 U.S. POWs at Malmedy, Belgium, in December 1944. And of course, even if he did not, it makes little difference. One joined the SS subscribing to its views, what one "thought was right," and if these men were young and if they were naive, and if they would now know better, and if they would now know better, and if they would now know better. and if as Chancellor Helmut Kohl tells us, they have been dead longer than they were alive, so too are the American boys, forever 18 and 20, who lie in fields far from their homes, who also subscribed to certain beliefs and what they "thought was right." LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Who lies in Bitburg? In Bitburg there lies, of course, only ashes. But the hopes of those ashes? The dreams? The beliefs and values of those SS boys and men, do they lie there too? Or are they elsewhere, still alive and waiting? If they lie there, do not honor them, Mr. Reagan. And if they are still alive, God help us all. BRADFORD T. WRIGHT. I uxembourg.

As a person who has disagreed — often violently — with Ronald Rea-gan on virtually every issue, I feel compelled to come to his defense with regard to the Bitburg visit. For once, he is right. It is time to Withdraw West Germany from NATO, disband the West German armed forces and let the defense of the Western world take place on Miami Beach and the shores of Long Island. The poison pens and clacking typewriters of the Western press alone will suffice to keep the Russians at bay. As an additional benefit we will not have to agonize over future graveyards of German soldiers. HANK B. PERRY.

As a citizen of the Federal Repub-lic of Germany, I feel ashamed that the government and much of the parliamentary opposition insist on in-cluding the visit to the Nazi-Wehrmacht cemetery at Bitburg on President Reagan's program — even though U.S. Congressmen of both parties asked that Bitburg be dropped from the itinerary. My reason? As long as the Wehrmacht existed the congenitation comes ed the concentration camps existed. RICHARD KOLBE

Hundreds of residents of Ibnet, situated in the central highlands of Ethiopia, resisted the evacuation by staying in their huts until the shelters were set affire, according to a tape recording made of an interview with Danny Hawley, an American nurse for World Vision. Mrs. Hawley said she witnessed part of the evacuation. World Vision is one of four relief agencies working at Ibnet.

Relief workers at the camp said Thursday that they saw two residents killed during the three days that the camp was being cleared

Jim Kinsella of Concern, an Irish relief agency, said he saw soldiers setting fire to the grass huts in which residents of Ibnet had been living. Concern relief workers confirmed that on Monday, the second day of the forced evacuation, they counted 17 bodies on the road outside the eamp.

Mrs. Hawley said: "You see, the patients said, "We would rather die here than go back to what we know is nothing." And so they wouldn't leave, and while the flames were going on these were still people who had besitated.

"When things were burning around them they decided to bring their possessions out and at least come out of the flames. But I saw people coming from the huts that were being burned at the time they were still there."

The statements of the relief workers were made to two British reporters and other members of a UN and Ethiopian government delegation that flew by helicopter Thursday from Addis Ababa to Ibnet. Their statements contradicted official explanations by Ethiopian officials Thursday about how the evacuation was conducted.

Returning to Addis Ababa on Thursday night from Ibnet, Kurt Jansson, the UN assistant secretary-general for emergency opera-tions in Ethiopia, said that the evacuation was "done with too much haste and with inadequate preparation."

"It is also clear," he said; "that there has been and will be suffering as a result of the hastiness."

Tens of thousands of former residents of Ibnet, including several thousand children under the age of five and thousands of adults who are weak from malmitrition, now are out walking in the rugged highland mountains of Ethiopia. Many sure, hunger or illness, relief workers at the camp said Thursday.

The United Nations has begun emergency preparations to attempt to airlift food and other aid.

At the Addis Ababa airport on Thursday morning, Dawit Wolde Giorgis, commissioner of the Ethiopian government's Relief and Re-habilitation Commission, denied a Washington Post reporter's request to accompany the party flying to Ibnet in a Polish relief helicopter.

William Shawcross, who is reporting for the London Observer and Rolling Stone magazine, and Michael Woolridge of the British Broadcasting Corp. were then allowed on the flight. Both reporters provided information to The Post. After a two-boar flight to the town of Gondar, the capital of Gondar province, the visiting official and reporters were given a version of the evacuation that was subsequently contradicted by relief workers at Ibnet.

Gondar officials of the Workers rry of Ethiopia, which under Ethiopia's Marxist government administers the region, specifically denied that the military was in-volved in the evacuation. They said that it had been planned for more than a month and that 7,000 people a week had left the camp during that time with rations of food.

The officials said that the people had been given the option of reset-tlement in the western part of Gondar province and were told that if they refused they would be sent home. This was national policy, the

During the course of the day, Ethiopian party officials provided reporters with three versions of how Ibnet was burned. All versions denied involvement of soldiers. One version described the burning as an accident, a second called it a sanitation measure and a third said it was the act of one misguided person who is now in prison.

At the camp, reporters learned that relief workers from World Vision had been told by the local authorities not to talk about the evacuation. But under questioning from reporters and from Mr. Dawit, among others, they discussed the episode.

The decision, made at a rally in a rogby stadium, represents a major challenge to President Pieter W. Botha, who refused Thursday to increase producer prices for corn.

The impact, however, will be felt mainly by the country's black majority of 23 million people, for whom white corn is a staple. A farmers' representative, Piet Gaus, forecast shortages by Monday, raising a prospect of further discontent in black townships.

Long-Assailed 'Rich Man's Sport' Returns to China

New York Times Service BELIING — The Communists who rule China have accommodated to fast food and Coca-Cola and disco. Now they are trying their hand at golf.

A game that has not been played in China since the days of wooden-shafted clubs, golf made a comeback Thursday at a gathering in the valley of the Ming tombs, 25 miles (40 kilometers) north of here. As part of a tourist development, a Japanese company has started laying out an 18hole course within a fairway or two of the mansoleums of 13 emperors of the Ming dynasty, who ruled from 1368 to 1644.

The ruling Politburo disyear-old Wang Zhen, to preside at the ceremony. The former army general put aside his lacquered cane, took a No. 3 iron off a temporary tee and after an initial air shot sent the ball tumbling down a fairway whose arid soil had been flecked with units of green cotton for the occasion.

Mr. Wang, who joined Mao on the Long March of the mid-1930s, conceded that it was his first acquaintance with the game. Although there was a golf club on the outskirts of Beijing for the foreign community as early as 1929, it was plowed under after the Communists took power and the game was denounced as a "sport for millionaires."

These days, it is less the socioeconomic nature of the game that concerns the Chinese rulers than its capacity to attract tourist money. They appear to be think-ing mainly of the Japanese, but Americans also play a part in

The plans have stirred protests. The novelist Han Suyin who lives in London, wrote in the China Daily, an English-language newspaper in Beijing, that "beside debasing the peasant surroundings" of the tombs, the golf course would prove "an expensive liability, not an asset."

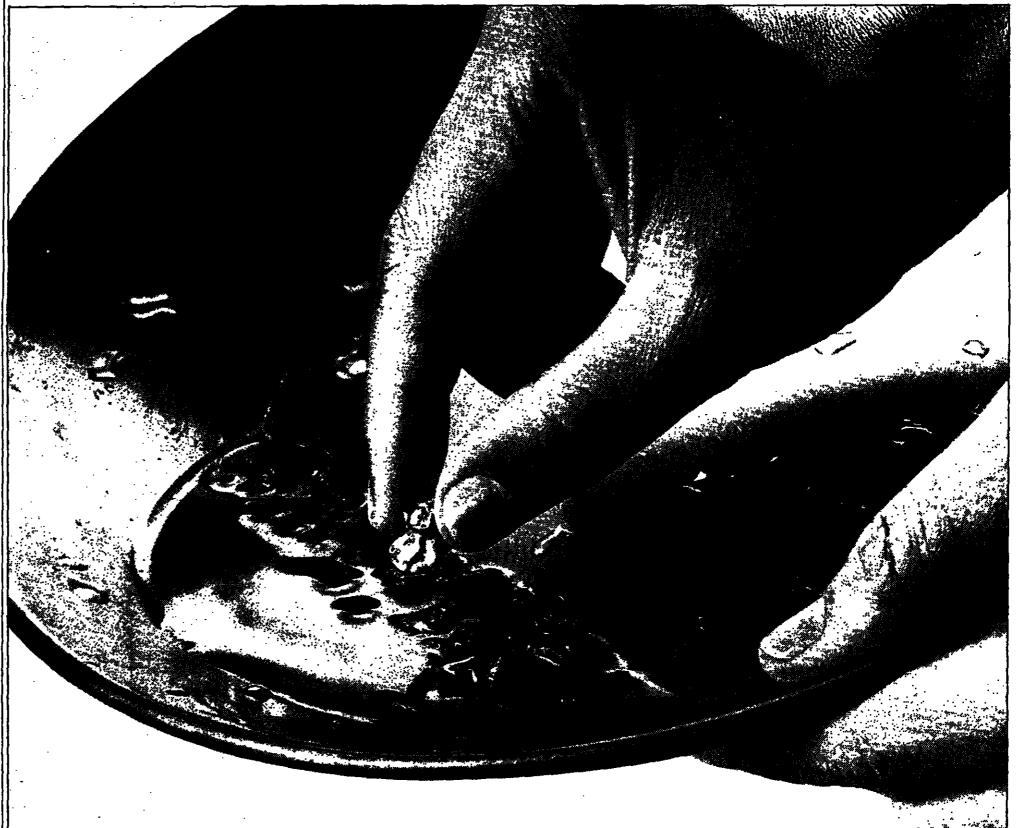

Her outrage was shared by others whose letters appeared in the paper. A woman from San Diego said that while she enjoyed an occasional game of golf, the furthest thing from her mind on a visit to China would be trying to shoot par in the Ming tombs.

Anselm Kiefer's Mythmaking Paintings

By John Russell

New York Times Service

New YORK — One of the best things that happened to Germany in 1945 was that Anselm Kiefer was born. Today Kiefer stands out not only as one of the most gifted artists now at work anywhere in the world but as a poet in paint (and other substances), a maker and remaker of myths, a tive past of his country and a man who can work small and very big with equal success and conviction. Whether in mixed media or in quite small works on paper, a painting by Kiefer is not like a painting by anyone else.

For these reasons, one of the shows that I most look forward to seeing in the next few years is the Kiefer retrospective being prepared for the Philadelphia Museum by Mark Rosenthal, curator of 20th-century art. Anyone who saw the Kiefer retrospective organized and annotated by Jurgen Harten for Düsseldorf, Paris and Jerusalem last year will know that Kiefer can stand exposure on a very large scale. The more we see - or so it seemed to many visitors - the better he looks. Meanwhile there is recent Kiefer paintings, large and

It is also relevant to Kiefer's ambitions that landscape, for him, is not a matter of delectation. He has produced landscapes that look back to Caspar David Friedrich and, way beyond Friedrich, to the dense forests of the northern Renaissance as they were portrayed by Dürer and Altdorfer. There is in the present show an enormous untitled painting in which the miraculous serpents rear up, strongly and alarmingly characterized, in a treescape that could almost have been signed by Altdorfer.

But landscape in these paintings is not so much a thing in itself as an echo, a pretext, a metaphor and an allegory. Not only is it haunted by history but it is subject to quasihuman misfortunes. It bleeds, burns, cries aloud. Blowtorch and ax have their way with the canvas (At one time, Kiefer conceived of images in which stocks of gasoline, stored underground by the army, had begun to leak and to soak upward, to be set on fire at ground

learns early to read, know and love Edward Lear's "A Book of Nonense." Very few later learn that Lear (1812-1888) was a brilliant watercolorist and an oil painter of landscapes who profited by travels in Europe, the Middle East and India to create elegant and beautiful works that frequently prefigure Impressionist painting.

Indeed, even "A Book of Nonsense" was a spin-off from his profession of painter, since he wrote it to amuse the children of the Earl of Derby when he was at Lord Derby's home, Knowsley Hall, from 1831 through 1837, portraying the birds and animals in the private menagerie. Some of Lear's early natural history drawings and paintings form the first section of the show "Edward Lear" at the Royal Academy of Arts. These early works are drawings and watercolors, some of such creatures as the yagourandi (a South American leopard), a mottled goose and a crowned crane from the "Menagerie and Aviary of Knowsley Hall." Some are from the illustrations to Lear's first personal enterprise, a picture book, ns or unc ra acidae, or Parrots," published on subscription by him in 1832, portraying the birds in the recently opened London Zoological Society's Gardens in Regent's Park. The early works also include the originals for many of the bird books published by John Gould (1804-1881), a lithographer who has ever since had a high reputation based on the unacknowledged work of other artists. For example, 69 of the prints in Gould's "Birds of Europe" were drawn and printed by Lear. Lear never lost his interest in natural history, nor his attention to portraying flora and fauna accurately, but in 1837 he set out on travels that kept him abroad for most of the rest of his life. First be went to Italy, where he shuttled between Rome and Sicily for a decade. Here he made many pencil and ink drawings, of which "Villa Adriana," on loan from the British Museum, is typical. Lear was unintentionally helpful to later art historians, carefully signing, dating and annotating his work, so that we know his ink-and-

We also know how greatly he appreciated the colors and liveli-ness of Egypt. The contemplation of Egypt must fill the mind, the artistic mind I mean, with great food for the rumination of long years," he wrote to Chichester Fortesche, later Lord Carlingford. Lear portrayed the Pyramids in the distance in the blories noon sun or from the in the blazing noon sun, or from the shaded causeway and avenue of trees planted five years earlier by Empress Eugènie of France on the opening of the Suez Canal.

Happily this exhibition does not neglect Lear's nonsensical vein. Not only did he write nonsense verses and songs, but he illustrated them, and made other nonsense drawings. Among the most delightful are a series from the Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript Library at Yale University, from "Nonsense Botanies," which includes the 'Piggiwiggia pyramidalis."

A contemporary traveler who has recently worked in England, Italy, the Middle East and the United States is the English artist Julian Barrow, whose works are at the Morton Morris Gallery.

The English landscapes are of Norfolk, Oxford, Wiltshire and Somerset; the London scenes are often of Cheisea, where Barrow lives and works in the studio that long housed John Singer Sargent. The Italian scenes include Rome, Venice and Florence, where, in the early 1960s, Barrow studied painting with Pictro Annigoni. His conversation pictures (interiors with people talking), and portraits of country houses are genres that became popular in the 18th century. "Julian Barrow: Landscapes, Conversation Pieces and Paintings of Country Houses," Morton Morris, 32 Bury Street, St. James's, London SW1, through May 17.

Comparatively little is known here of Irish painting or painters, so "Celtic Splendor: An Exhibition of Irish Paintings and Drawings 1850-1950," at Pyms Gallery, which shows the work of 28 Irish artists, is particularly welcome. Even more welcome is the range and quality. Notable are the landscapes of James Richard Marquis (fl. 1853-1885) and Nathaniel Hone (1831-1917); the workshop interior, "The Umbrella Man," by George Atkinson (1880-1941); a lyrical Western Ireland panorama, "A Western Caravan," and a stunwash drawing "Near Suez" of a group of desert Arabs around their ing (1889-1977); a splendid porfire was painted in "Evening Jan. Hara Art In Tokyo

By Terry Trucco Tokyo - Life is sweet for I those specializing in Japan's traditional arts, but things get tougher for anyone involved in art's contemporary international strains. New York-style gallery support hardly exists and museum shows are rare. Those with talent and nerve often flourish best quality is uneven, but the overall effect is appealing. Katsuhiro Fujimura's gigantic sculpted vats, whimsical in slashed corrogated cardboard, stand at attention on the museum's roof. Kousen Ootsubo has turned a small whitewalled room into a curious torture chamber; a huge spike-edged wood sculpture grows up from the floor and climbs the walls while sharpened spikes in the blanched wood assault all who walk through the door. The media are chopsticks and toothpicks.

All this makes the Hara Annual. a yearly spring sampling of new Japanese art at Tokyo's Hara Museum, a treat. The show, which this 🦛 year features works by 13 youngish artists, is one of the rare opportunities to see a cross section of contemporary Japanese work. This year's show includes video and a performance piece as well as paintings, sculpture, works on paper and several room-size environments.

As in many group shows here.

The museum's garden also gets its due, with Fusako Tsuzki's enormons tree-branch sculptures and regularly scheduled performances by Min Tanaka, a leading figure in buto, the expressionistic dance style that grew out of Japan's postwar

But Fusako Yusaki's witty videos, filled with animated clay sculptures, are the show's standout. An hourlong collection had enraptured onlookers riveted to their seats laughing. Sculpted out of crayon-colored clay, her images shoot across the screen, swift and sharp, changing into the unexpected. A boat becomes a ship and then a bigger ship. And before the viewer can take in the detail, it is slapped into a ball and caught by a big clay hand. This was Yusaki's first show in Japan. In 1965, when she was a 28year-old sculptor, she won a scholarship from the Italian government, and she has lived in Milan ever since. She displays what may be Japan's main contribution to the international art world - the ability to blur boundaries between art and craft, fine art and commercial

When it comes to Western culture, the Japanese are unabashed francophiles. The latest proof is the rousing reception given an exhibition of vintage and contemporary wares presented by the Comité Colbert at the charming Teien Museum of Art. On a recent Sunday, visitors waited more than an hour to enter. Once inside, most lingered longer than usual, inspecting the Louis Vuitton book trunk, compiete with fold-out table, once owned by Leopold Stokowski, and scrutinizing one of René Lacoste's white tennis jackets, c. 1927, complete with alligator.

With the Japanese being urged to "buy foreign," Comité Colbert — an association of 69 top French companies, including Baccarat, Christofle, Chanel and Chaumet — couldn't have held better timing couldn't have had better timing. But it was the vintage pieces, those owned and often created for the rich and famous, that drew the sahs. On view are the exquisitely embroidered Porthault sheets selected by the Duchess of Windsor and a version of a stunning blackand-white evening gown worn by Jacqueline Kennedy as first lady.

The museum, an art deco house once home to Prince Asaka, has wonderful Lalique glass windows and proved the perfect setting. "Arts de Vivre en France," Tokyo Metropolitan Teien Museum of Art, 5-6-9 Shiragana-dai, Tokyo, through May 12.

'Big River' Bogs Down in the Script

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — "Big River: The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" is the last Broadway musical of the season - and the first that audiences can attend without fear of suffering profound embarrassment or terminal boredom. This show has a lot going for it: a tuneful score by country music's Roger Miller, exuberant performers and a gifted director, Des McAnuff. If all of "Big River" were up to its high-water marks. the season might have found the exciting new musica it desperately craves. But too often the imaginative flow of "Big River" slows to a trickle. While young theatergoers may well enjoy the entire enterprise, adults may find the evening a mixture of the modestly engaging and the tolerably bland.

At its best, "Big River" is much more faithful to its source than one might expect. The musical's creators understand that Twain's novel is not merely a boy's adventure tale. When Huck (Daniel H. Jenkins) and Jim (Ron Richardson) board their raft to a rousing song called "Muddy Water," McAnuff and his designer, Heidi Landesman, magically convey the characters' exhilaration at fleeing home; the moonlit river rises up on stage like a silver ribbon, tugging the audience and beroes alike into a mysterious, uncharted wilderness of the American spirit.

If the makers of "Big River" can send us floating dreamily down the Mississippi, it should be simple for them to accomplish such relatively easy tasks as telling the novel's plot, repeating its jokes and dramatizing its resonant love story between an outcast boy and a runaway slave. But "Big River" does the hard things well and the easy things sloppily. William Hauptman's script is as formulaic as McAnuff's staging is daring.

Hauptman attempts to include too many of the novel's anecdotes, and in so doing, must often trun-cate or rush them to the point where their comic payoff (and, at times, narrative thrust) is lost. Yet the modents he does leave out — the Grangerford-She-pherdson fend, the vigilante lynching — are precisely those that are most essential to preserving the novel's bite. Worse, the show shifts its focus away from its heroes to center on those vagrant con men, the Duke (Rene Auberjonois) and the King (Bob Gunton).

The music and lyrics, often riding on giddy banjoand-fiddle-flecked hoedown arrangements, at first rise well above the text. Act I contains one lively song after "Guv'ment" (flintily delivered by John Goodman as Pap Finn), a sweet spiritual for anonymous slaves and a haunting anthem, "River in the Rain." But once the book bogs down irrevocably in Act II, Miller turns to clickés.

The Wallace Collection: Monument To a Very Rich Man's Way of Life

LONDON — The modern museum is didactic: It takes you by the hand and leads you through the life of an artist or the art of a period. For an additional small sum of money it will electronically whisper a lesson in your ear. It has come a long way since its European beginnings in the 18th-century "cabinet of curiosities," where a dried frog with two heads might be sitting between a medieval miniature and the baptismal cup of the owner's grandfather.

The way from one to the other led through the 19th century, when the rich collector who had filled his mansion with "beautiful objects" would allow proper-ly introduced strangers a look around. The Wallace Collection in Hertford House is much closer in feel to the collector's mansion than to the National Gallery.

Two factors put the Wallace Collection into a class of its own: The family that created it was not just rich but exceptionally rich; and many of the items were chosen with exceptional taste, discrimination or perhaps simply luck. Thus were brought together Rubens, Murillo, Guardi, Canaletto, some of the best-known Dutch interior and landscape painters of the 17th century, Watteau, Fragonard, Poussin, Titian, Velazquez. All this in rooms filled with ancien regime boulle furniture, porcelain from Sevres and objects such as gold and silver barometers, an "eternal calendar" made for Louis XV — things the nearly empty rooms of Versailles by right should show but do not.

A key bonus of the Wallace Collection is that it not only displays art but is a monument and a record. It shows how a prominent art collector a hundred years ago arranged his collection around himself and lived Hertford House sits in one of those squares that are among the surprises of London. The mansion was built for a Duke of Manchester about 200 years ago, and it is in Manchester Square, less than a minute from Baker Street.

Manchester sold his house to the Hertfords, and it was the third Marquess of Hertford who got the theme "L'Enfance d'Ubu," at the Galerie Marwan Hoss, 12 Rue d'Alger (through June 28); and a collection of 40 drawings by Alberto Giacometti at the Galerie was also the buyer of many 17th-century Dutch maswas also the buyer of many 17th-century Dutch masters, Sèvres porcelain and Titian's "Perseus and

His son, the fourth marquess, who fived most of his life in Paris, did the real work on the collection. With a yearly income of £250,000 (then an enormous sum), he became one of Europe's best-known art buyers. He lived as a hermit ("He has never had anyone to dinner," the Goncourt brothers wrote of him in their journal, a year before his death in 1870) and encapsulated himself in the art and artifacts of the 18th

The marquess's 18th-century approach to life is the reason that his collection is now a public one, and that it is named the Wallace Collection. Richard Seymour-Conway, fourth Marquess of Hertford, never married, but at the age of 18 he sired a son. Next to nothing is known of the mother but her name, Agnes Wallace. From 1824, when the boy was 6, he lived with his father in Paris. After the marquess's death, his English relatives found to their indignation that all his unentailed possessions were left to this son, Richard Wallace. That included the entire art treasure as well as Hertford House,

The fourth marquess died one month before Napoleon III capitulated to the Prussians at Sedan. Richard Wallace was caught in the siege of Paris, and he used his new wealth so liberally for the relief of the starving Parisians that afterward he was made a member of the Legion of Honor and was created a baronet by Queen Victoria, who was as a rule not fond of irregular family situations. For once, the queen was less prejudiced than English society: Sir Richard moved to Hertford House with his French wife but the two were never really accepted. It did not belp that Lady Wallace was known to have started out as a shop assistant, that she spoke no English, and was, by a contemporary de-scription, "heavy, large, scowling." Wallace went back to France eventually; his wife stayed in Hertford House, rarely seen, and outlived him by seven years. After her death in 1897 it turned out that this unaccepted and scowling French lady had bequeathed the collection to the British nation, with the stipulation "that it shall be kept together, unmixed with other objects of art, and shall be styled the Wallace Collec-

For nearly a hundred years, the Statue of Liberty has been America's most powerful symbol of freedom and hope. Today the corrosive action of almost a century of weather and poliution has eaten away at the iron framework, etched holes in the copper exterior.

Less than a mile away, on Ellis Island where the ancestors of nearly half of all Americans first stepped onto American soil, the Great Hall of the Immigration Center is a hollow ruin. Rooms are vandalized, walls crumbling in decay.

Inspiring plans have been developed to restore the Statue and to create at Ellis Island a living monument to the ethnic diversity of this country of immigrants. But unless restoration is begun now, these two national treasures could be closed at the very time we celebrate their hundredth anniversaries. The 230 million dollars needed to carry out the work is needed now.

All of the money must come from private donations; the federal government is not raising the funds. The Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Centennial Commission appointed by President Reagan is asking every American to contribute. The torch of liberty is everyone's to cherish. Could we hold up our.

The Dow Jones industrial average climbed 4.97 to 1,247.24. For the week, the Dow lost 27.94.

The market had been up more than 7 points earlier in the day, following Salomon Brothers' announcement that its respected chief economist, Henry Kaufman, saw improved prospects for a cut in the discount rate. Volume slowed, with 94,870,000 issues traded on the Big Board, down from 107,740,000 traded Thursday. Friday's bounce was due to the news of a possible lower discount rate, said Lew Smith, of Bear Stearns. Both the stock and bond market reacted, he said, but not in a sustained way. "The rather duli rebound suggests that the market has not found itself a bottom yet from this decline," he said. The current low level of the Dow "is an indication that short-term skepticism is up, and short-term bullishness is down," said Alfred Goldman, of A.G. Edward & Sons in St. Louis. He said it was likely that the market could experience further selling early next week, poising it for an upward move.

"A blue Monday and lower prices could set us up for a rally starting by the middle of next week," Mr. Goldman said.

On the trading floor, Arco was the most active NYSE-listed issue, adding % to 62%. Houston Natural Gas followed, gaining % to 6714. InterNorth agreed to acquire it for $70 a share. InterNorth was also active, losing lost 1%

Mobil was third, adding 1½ to end at 33½. In other petroleum issues, Unocal closed unchanged at 45% and Amerada Hess advanced 14 to 32%. Amoco slid % to 66% and Phillips Petroleum lost 🕸 to 38%.

E.F. Hutton gained 2½ to 3½ in active trading. After pleading guilty to 2,000 counts of fraud and establishing an S8 million reserve fund to make restitution to banks, a shareholder filed a class-action suit for unspecified dam-

two-year agreement with the investor, Ivan F. Boesky. Mr. Boesky will limit his shareholding to 4.3 percent, and not participate in proxy contests or takeover moves.

Autos strengthened, with General Motors, Ford and Chrysler all gaining slightly. Some technologies improved. IBM (ex-dividend) gained ¼ to 125, Digital Equipment 1% to 99 and National Semiconductor ¼ to 10%. Eli Lilly moved ahead 1% to 77% and Upjohn umped 2 to 89%.

Among the day's gainers were Chubb, adding 2½ to 69%, Cummins, up 2¼ to 64, Cigna, up 2½ to 54% and Dayton Hudson, up 2 to 38¼.

State-of-the-Art Restoring Replaces Tweezers With Remote-Sensing Devices

By Kate Singleton

MILAN — For many people, the restoration of art works conjures up images of a bespecta-cled individual, paintbrush and tweezers in hand, bent over a dark and cracking "Madonna and Child" in a lonely workshop. At best, this view is simplistic, but mostly, it is completely mistaken. This is partly because in recent years the whole concept of restoration has changed.

Once, it was held that art works should be restored to what they were when they were created. Since there often was no way of finding out just how they had been, this approach and the outcome were, to a degree, subjective. Such an impelling desire for historical veracity could also bring about some hidicrons situations: the destruction of a splendid Baroque facade, for instance, in order to reveal a rather average Renaissance one

Drastic action of this sort has now been supplanted by a more conservative attitude: Restoration should mean gentle cleaning, the conservation of the art work in its present condition and the fullest possible documentation on all aspects of its genesis and transforma-

For some years now, highly sophisticated tech-niques have been used to achieve these goals. Various kinds of remote-sensing techniques, ranging from scanning electron microscopy to holography and radiology, allow researchers to collect types and quantities of information regarding a painting, sculpture or building that would otherwise be inaccessible. The data embodied in the images obtained are collected without damaging the object in question (unlike tak-ing actual samples) and can be stored on film or fed into a computer by means of an analogical-digital converter and stored there.

However, the computer can do more than just store images. It can process them and thus come up with invaluable facts or hypotheses concerning the object sconstruction, materials, original colors and so on. Since the processing has to be guided (in the sense that the researcher has to know more or less what he is looking for), the use of computers in restoration can be said to fit in between the observation of the phenomenon on the one hand and its interpretation on the

On paper, all this sounds fairly straightforward. In reality, it has called for major efforts at overcoming disciplinary divisions among those involved.

In Italy, as elsewhere, the curators of public galleries trained in one of the country's three restoration institutes (in Rome, Florence and Venice); and the engineers, informatics experts and technicians who handle botogrammetry, X-ray surveys, thermal imaging systems and such are normally employed in medical or

So you need art historians who are aware of what is going on in the sciences, and scientists with a sensitivity for history and the arts who are also capable of applying to a new field techniques developed for completely different purposes.

Breaking down these and other barriers calls for a catalyst, who may be a person or, occasionally, a company. The cleaning of Leonardo da Vinci's "Last Supper" in Milan was undermined by warring factions until Olivetti stepped in as something more than a sponsor: a host almost. Since then, the company has also supplied the Venice authorities with funds, technicians and equipment for making computerized in-frared reflectoscope surveys of paintings in the Acca-

The person who has probably done most to promote such collaboration, to train a new generation of restorers and to imbue the authorities in Rome with a minimum of awareness, is Prof. Umberto Baldini, a former head of the restoration workshop of the Opificio delle Pietre Dure in Florence and now director of the Central Restoration Institute in Rome.

Mr. Baldini has backed up important exhibitions on the subject with scholarly but accessible publications (for instance, the catalogue "Metodo e Scienza," published by Sansoni in Florence in 1982, or the more recent "Marco Aurelio - Mostra di Cantiere," produced by his institute in Rome) and he has got the restorers he has trained to train others through seminar series such as the present "Image Processing for Art Works," held on Fridays in Florence.

The first remote-sensing technique to be called in when an art work is being studied is, at least theoretically, the photogrammetric survey. Used with particular success by the Italians and the French, photogrammetry offers absolutely objective graphic and numerical representations of the objects photo-

Gould Sale Shows Limits of Promotion

$1 Million Bid to Attract 'Greenhorns' May Have Backfired

By Souren Melikian

N EW YORK — The Gould sale of Impressionist paint-ings held on April 24 in New York will be remembered as a landmark in the art market, although not quite in the way that Soth-eby's might have wished it.

After months of the heaviest hype campaign ever witnessed in art market annals, the 56 drawings and paintings from the col-lection of the late Florence Gould made more than $31 million. This should have enhanced Sotheby's prestige, but where professionals are concerned, that goal was not

Sotheby's overstated its case. Too much was expected of too little. The sale was widely de-scribed by dealers and collectors of old standing as one of the dullest they had attended, despite all the talent of John Marion, a brilliant auctioneer highly receptive to the mood of his public. A tactical mistake in the organization of the auction may have made things more difficult. The first six lots were 18th-century drawings, which were not particularly attractive and were totally out of context in a catalog titled Impressionist Paintings and Drawings from the Estate of Florence J. Gould." To new buyers, attracted by the hype of the impressionist collection, they meant nothing. To experienced collec-tors, the estimates seemed ab-

The inevitable happened: The drawings sold below the lowest estimates or just on the line.

Figures by a Watermill" in black chalk, heightened with white on blue paper, was unfortunately foxed. Prolonged exposure to daylight had turned the "blue paper" into a pinkish gray. It was sold for $20,900 instead of the $30,000 to $50,000 anticipated by

The next Boucher drawing, "Two Putti in Clouds," went for $19,800 (the estimate was $30,000 to $50,000). A portrait of a seated girl by Fragonard in red chalk, one of the few that the French artist bothered to sign and date (1785), sold for $88,000 (estimate $100,000 to $150,000). A mediostructure to $150,000). A means-cre drawing of a woman in red and black chalk with white by Watteau made up at the top was bought for $165,000, a huge price although this was only the lowest estimate. A very poor sketch in ink and gray wash by Francisco Gova, remained upsold at Goya remained unsold at $220,000, which points to a totally unrealistic reserve price. The false start had a chilling effect on the new buyers who had come for the Impressionists. They learned that the estimates printed by Sotheby's in their catalogs do not have to be taken at face value. At first, the negative effect seemed compensated by two paintings that did extraordinarily well. A small study by Corot in oils of a "Greek Officer" in the Greek War of Independence against Turkey zoomed to an incredible $200,000, boosted not so much by artistic splendor, which was conspicuously lacking, as by its historical value to Greeks.

Next came the masterpiece in François Boucher opened the the sale, a small landscape of Co-proceedings. A "Landscape With rot's early Roman period (around $935,000, over Sotheby's highest estimate of $700,000. After that, the auction went up and down. A small portrait by Corot went to collector Ian Woodner of New York City for $66,000 (estimate $100,000 to $150,000). A Courbet still life was sold for $1.21 million, a gigantic price. Third-rate paintings by the third-rate artist Lepine went very well, a mediocre Sisley not too well at $286,000. A marvelous still life of peaches on vine leaves by Manet made about the right price at $330,000, although much less than Sotheby's exaggerated $400,000 to $500,000 estimate.

This led up to the Van Gogh, which apparently disappointed Sotheby's as it soared to a record $9.9 million. Yet the price is brilliant. So were those of Toulouse as the Seurat sketch in oils bagged

Going After the Unobtainable

Mantegna's "The Adoration of the Magi."

LONDON — The hunt for the great names of European painting of the Renaissance and the Baroque age is stepping up. Few great works by great masters of the past are to be seen outside museums and a few European churches. When one turns up in the open market, it generates great excitement. This is what happened in London on April 18 at the end of Christie's auction of Old Master paintings.

At the idea that they might acquire an "impor-tant" work by Andrea Mantegna, museum directors and millionaire collectors building up private museums to serve as mansoleums to their memory, lost any sense of proportion.

Under the spotlights, the painting came alive for a few minutes. What must have once been the warm, intense vermilion of Saint Joseph's cap in the "Adoration of the Magi" became red again. The yellow of the Virgin's turban took on the golden shade that it must have had when the painting was executed, sometime around 1500, toward the end of Mantegna's life. For, without the lighting, the colors of the painting look unnaturally pale. This, Christie's experts explained, is because the mixture of oil and tempera has been absorbed into the linen. The fact that it was relined 90 years ago may well be responsible for the unpleasant sleekness of the paint surface.

Whatever the cause, such a faded color scheme would have been enough to kill the painting only a few years ago. The fact that no less than several versions of the same "Adoration of the Magi" are in existence would not have helped it either. And a third handicap would have been its lack of documentation back beyond the late 19th century.

The huge £8.1 million the picture was sold for points up the awareness among the great collec-(Continued on Page 12)

In the center of New York City, Fifty-Seventh Street intersects the world's greatest collection of distinctive shops and businesses. Antiques showrooms, galleries of fine art, elegant furniture and fabric houses, interior design showrooms and studios, renowned jewelers and celebrated specialty shops serve the sophisticated rastes of an international clientele. Furniture Collecting Is Mostly Mise en Scène

N EW YORK — Period furni-ture is bought these days by very rich people who seek a decorative effect even when they see themselves as collectors. This fundamental motivation accounts for the apparent contradiction that may be noted in almost any important furniture auction, be it in London. New York or Paris.

The latest example was provided by Christie's sale of English furniture in New York on April 20. There has been a craze in the last two years or so for English furniture of the second half of the 18th century and early 19th century. is on the Greek and Roman reper-many places.

Early in Christie's sale, a marvelous mahogany etagère, as Christie's catalog chose to call the book-shelves, illustrated the Regency version of Neoclassicism. The shelves carved with reeding were supported by balusters and topped by a Roman-style pediment. Despite some missing pieces, the éta-gère went up to $7,150. With an additional $1,000 restoration bill, it will be a dearly acquired piece, very pretty but not unique. For decoration, however, it is ideal: Thanks to Neoclassical design drawing heavi- its small size, it can be fitted into

In contrast to these two pieces, an absolute rarity caused no great sensation. This was a George II burean bookcase belonging to the very first wave of Neoclassicism. The base of the desk simulates stone masonry. The upper part is designed as a Roman arch. A single

$48,720 for the marvelous piece. Yet the importance of the English bureau bookcase to the history of furniture is comparable to that of an extraordinary ebony bureau plat that was sold in 1978 by Maurice Segoura at the Biennale des Antiquaires in Paris. The bureau plat was also in Neoclassical style, with tapering grooved legs of a type later favored by the Louis XVI cabinetmakers. It was, however, designed in the Louis XV peri- European market in the 18th centu-cusped arches. These greatly add to its elegance. Although it was seen in a London sale at Christie's last Maurice Segoura's bureau plat year, it sold without difficulty at $39,600, a stiff price that looks moderate only when compared with Christie's $35,000 to $50,000 was advanced for its time but not nearly so as the English bureau bookcase datable to the late 1730s. Its earlier date underlines the underpricing of such pieces in the market, although Christie's, which had given it an estimate of $15,000 to $25,000, was pleased with the English furniture of the Regency period that is fine and nice to look at but not rare is on the rise. A rosewood breakfast table with eboband of carved ornament runs half-way up. Bidding stopped only at stretchers went up to $27,500. The colors, decidedly on the showy side, helped it in the context of a New York sale where the emphasis concerning furniture is increasingly on the spectacular. Indeed, the American taste for the theatrical touch has resulted in some extraordinary prices concern-ing types that have little or no following in Europe. That is true, for example, of Chinese furniture in the English taste made for the West

More astonishing still are the heights to which some late 19th-century furniture from England will now rise on the American market. In the April 20 sale, a canterbury and folio stand in satinwood made around the middle of the 19th century went up to $10,450. This is a sort of table with four legs rising from a pedestal on wheels in which a drawer is concealed. Dividers, which in this case were artistically carved with lauice work, help keep the cumbersome folios straight. These can be rested against the stands incorporated with the top of the table.

The New York piece was of the best quality for its style, but suf-fered from the heaviness that is typical of its period. The price is enormous. It is due to the strong color of the yellow veneer and the mise en scène to which it will lend itself in some expensive library or study, filled with rare folios for display, not reading.

The figure, however, seems modest, as does the appearance of the piece, compared with the writing table of the same period that was sold an hour later for $29,700. The walnut burr top inlaid with rosewood ivory and mother-of-pearl marquetry was so ornate that there was hardly a place where the eye could rest. It was covered with scrolls and flowers without much concern for consistency and balance. To make it look richer, the cabinetmaker had thrown in a gilt molding that runs around the lobed top and more gilding still on the prices. In March 1984, the finest set of mahogany armchairs by Georg bers seeing in the market came up at Drougt. The model, based on the Roman design for curule chairs, was probably executed around 1800. It is a masterpiece of architectural balance - the legs form a semicircular arch and the seat and arms affect the shape of an inverted arch tangent to the former. With the added advantage of its admira-ble detail and its perfect condition, the set of four Consulat armchairs was not exactly overpriced as Christian Delorme sold it for 288,000 francs.

Allowance must be made for the deficiencies of the Drouot marketing technique. Even so, had there been a highly competitive market worldwide, dealers would have jostled to get the set. They did not because it is too austere and too rarefied for anyone who is not a collector. And collectors' criteria would appear to be by and large the more striking as other types of inoperative concerning furniture.

intimidating ambiance associated with antique shops disappears. About 50,000 people are expected to wander in and out of what becomes a vast open house, running uninterruptedly from 11 A.M. until 10 P.M. each day. Dealers will answer questions and entertain with historical anecdotes recounting the provenances of the rare, beautiful and exotic paintings, objects and furniture assembled especially for

The Carre has long been celebrated for its concentration of an-tique dealers; some, like Nicolier, Vandermeersach, Segoura, Lefeb-vre and Bresset, have been passed down in those families for generamal mummies dating from 300 B.C. A dog, a cat and a baboon, repre-

When the first rumors of clandestine digging and smuggling of art treasures out of mainland China started spreading in the West via Hong Kong dealers greeted the news with skepticism. They began to pay closer attention around 1982. when green-glazed vessels of the Han period suddenly seemed to turn up in droves - there was no reason why Western collectors should all at once have tired of one particular category.

Last fall, incontrovertible evidence of the unthinkable surfaced in the leading auction houses, Sotheby's and Christie's. On Dec. 4, in New York, a sale of "Fine Chinese Ceramics and Works of Art" was held at Sotheby's the day after the atiction of the celebrated Schloss ecollection. It included a rare and beautiful protoporcelain jar of the Western Han period. The lower half was a fine rusty brown while the upper part, divided in concen-nic bands by ribs, was covered with an olive-green. "kiln-glaze." Two lugs with mock beaded rings reproducing metallic prototypes added to its monumental quality. Surpris-ingly, the sale included another piece that closely resembled it, only lacking the conical knops on either side of each lug. On Dec. 11, those who had been

On Dec. 11, those who had been distributed in New York and were now attending Sotheby's London sale looked in disbelief at a third jar, which matched the first New York piece within a fraction of an inch. The main difference was that the comcal knops were set slightly farther away from the lugs, a variation to be expected in an Oriental pair. The London jar and the New York companion piece could only have come out of the same funerary chamber in which such jars were > Similiar pairs could be noted among the 12th-century wares. Lot 256 in Sotheby's New York sale was a very line and rare Yingging jar and cover with lotus blossoms carved under a translucent glaze of pale greenish-bluish late. The glaze was thinner than usual and the cover had a polylobed rim, which is uncommon. By some fluke, lot 215 in Sotheby's London sale included the matching piece.

There were other remarkable leading auction houses. Sotheby's "coincidences." In a sale held at had broken up pairs in order not to Christie's in London a day before give their sale a repetitive appear-Sotheby's session, there were no ance. That the finds were recent Sotheby's bought in one Henan vase and sold another for $2,200, half the lowest estimate. They all lacked the calligraphic quality in the floral designs in rusty brown that the Japanese look for. Yingqing porcelain fared poorly despite its beauty. The new pieces lack that smooth thick glaze that they should have to suit current Far Fastern tastes. The vase and cover with carved lotus blossoms from the pair referred to above failed to sell in New York and was bought in at $17,500, although its lowest estimate, $20,000, was far below the top prices for similar pieces six or seven years ago. Further back in time, Han pottery, mostly of the 1st and 2d centuries, has been severely hit.

The lukewarm reaction to types of pottery previously unknown is more surprising. They should have generated immense interest. Christie's London sale, for example, inchided some remarkable pottery of the 10th to 11th centuries, probably originating from the Liao area on the outskirts of China proper, which did not sell. A highly interesting footed vase with a rich honey glaze, estimated at £2,000 to £3,000, did not even reach that level and was bought in. The same mishap befell a saucer with ocher and almond-green splashes on white glaze.

In contrast is the enthusiasm with which early gift bronze pieces of a new type have been greeted. A stunning figure of a Boddhisattva, which, sources in Hong Kong said, had only come out of China three months before the sale, zoomed to bloom retained by some of the ear-£47,000 at Sotheby's New York. ly pottery with iridescent glaze (af-The price was fully justified by the rarity and importance of the object.

ter years of handling, the bloom gets tarnished). tie's sold a sensational gilt-bronze reliquary at a steep but equally justified £73,440. Similarly, the finest abundance has been drastic. The prices for Henan vases of mediumrange quality have tumbled. In bronze belt hook of the Warring Christie's Dec. 10 sale in London, States period (481-221 B.C.), inlaid three out of five remained unsold; in gold and silver, established a record for its type at £35,700. The two others respectively went for £4,752 and £4,536. In New York, reason is that in each case the

Dealers are worried about the present situation. Those who deal essentially in the very top end of the market, such as Giuseppe Eskenazi of London, say they are re-assured after an initial period of anxiety. Others, such as Roger Bluett, perhaps the finest connois-seur of Chinese pottery, feel that great psychological harm is done by the cartloads of medium-quality wares coming on the market, ob scuring the fact that masterpiece are almost as rare as ever. According to reports from Hong Kong, the export of excavated antiquities has stopped. This has yet to be confirmed. The next June and July auctions should tell. Whatever the outcome, the jolt that has been given to the Chinese market - per-haps the soundest of all, thanks to the widely scattered buyers from Japan and Hong Kong to Europe and America — is a useful remind er that the price put on art depends more on the lure of rarity than on

The provenance of the Mantegna underlines the present situation. It was sent for sale by the marquess of Northampton. His is an old and important English collection that one would not expect to come on the market. The reason for the sale was the need to finance the costly maintenance of the marquess's historic house, which is now open to

*David Holding the Head of Goliath," considered by Sotheby's experts to be a late work by Guido Reni, offers an interesting parallel. When the large-size canvas, 84% by 56% inches (214 cm by 143 cm) turned up out of the blue in Sotheby's early spring sale of Old Mas-ters on April 3, it was so grimy that two cleaning tests had to be carried out before the experts could satisfy themselves that it was by Reni.

The painting was acquired in northern England by the vendor's father at the turn of the century. There is no record of it before that time. It also exists in several versions and, like the Mantegna, it is considered to be a late work by the artist. At £2.2 million, it stunned all the professionals, starting with Sotheby's experts, who had first auticipated bids in the area of £250,000, later revising their esti-

Sotheby's public image. The money spent in "promotional efforts" was, in Sotheby's publicly stated estimate, in the area of $1 million. The traveling exhibition to London, the flurry of parties in New York and elsewhere, added up quickly. Profits were further re-duced as a result of the drastic terms believed to have been forced upon Sotheby's by the shrewd executors of the Gould estate. The basic problem of the art market is the dearth of goods. The greenest of greenhorns may be made to believe for some time that a bad painting is a good painting, but not forever - there are such criteria as composition, brushwork, color balance, relative importance within the artist's ocuvre and, not least, condition. ECONOMIC SCENE

Economic Lingo May Be Key to Summit's Results

SATURDAY-SUNDAY MAY 4-5, 1985

By LEONARD SILK New York Times Service

ONN — "Good rhetoric," a wise economist once said, "has to precede good policy actions." What is the rhetoric of this Bonn summit conference and what does it portend?

Convergence. Originally, the concept of convergence meant the ostensible tendency of capitalist and communist economic systems to resemble each other more and more, with capitalist systems assigning more important roles to government bodies and communist systems giving greater scope to markets.

In the language of summitry, this meaning of convergence has been abandoned, as President Ronald Reagan, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, Chancellor Helmut Kohi and others, with the exception of President François Mitterrand, seek to reverse the growth of

contradiction with

Instead, convergence has been given a new meaning: The drive to make rates of inflation in the different capitalist countries converge to a common, low rate of inflation. Such convergence is now the Holy Grail of the monetarists. However, pragmatists and moderates [no one here is willing to confess to being a liberal or a Keynesian] think that it remains necessary to pursue not only the goal of low inflation but also the goals of accelerating growth and reducing unemployment.

Yet the rhetoric of new-style convergence inhibits actions to expend demand at a means of sourcing faster growth and lower expand demand as a means of spurring faster growth and lower unemployment. Under the spell of convergence language, the old concept of "reflation" has become a dirty and unutterable word, since even pumping up the economy when its tires are flat is taken as risking inflation and stimulating demand instead of strengthening supply.

Compatibility of policies. This phrase, lovely in its obscurity, seems to imply that, as nations seek convergence, they should follow policies that are harmonious but not necessarily identical. Indeed, the compatibility theory may imply a certain contradic-tion with the convergence theory. For instance, if the United States economy is slowing, other countries ought to pursue World public sector borrowing requirement. This is a way of rationalizing compatibility of policy. The concept of a national public sector borrowing requirement, the money a government must borrow to finance its budget deficit, was born in Britain. The mandarins of Whitehall have now produced the world borrowing requirement, implying that if some governments shrink their deficits, there is room for others to increase theirs.

The world borrowing requirement is far-out stuff that has not yet achieved respectability. But it may yet give pragmatic activists a stick with which to beat passive monetarists.

ARGET zones. The range within which currencies may be allowed to vary in relation to each other. The creation of such exchange-rate zones appears to be the main goal of the French for changing the world monetary system. Everybody else here is against target zones, arguing that international capital flows are so enormous they would wreck any attempt to keep currencies within the zones. But the French point to what they consider the success of the European Monetary System, a fixed-rate system with some flexibility, as evidence that a wider and more stable system can work. The French appear determined not to permit a date to be set, as Mr. Reagan ardently wants, for a new round of trade negotiations. As this conference has evolved, a date in 1986,

Siemens Net Profit Rises 56%

Sales Up 33% In First Half

By Warren Getler International Herald Tribune
FRANKFURT — Siemens AG. West Germany's largest electronics group, said Friday that world group net profit jumped 56 percent in the first half of fiscal 1985.

Consolidated net earnings climbed to 640 million Deutsche marks ($203.2 million) from October through March from 410 mil-lion DM a year earlier, the Munichbased conglomerate said.

World group sales, led by electronic components, automation, communication systems and medical technology, climbed 33 percent to 26.7 billion DM in the first half from 20.1 billion DM the year before, the company said.

Consequently, Siemens was able to raise its profit margin, the earn-ings-to-sales ratio, to 2.4 percent in the first half from 2.0 in the yearearlier period. Siemen's fiscal year ends Sept. 30, 1985.

Siemens noted, however, that world sales increase largely reflected payment for several power-station projects. Excluding power-station business, revenue rose 10 percent. Siemens said. It did not provide ligures.

In the first half, foreign sales increased 8 percent to 11.8 billion DM while domestic revenue, including receipts for the power stations, jumped 64 percent to 14.9 billion DM. Excluding those receipts, domestic sales rose 7 percent, the company said, again without providing precise figures.

Order intake expanded 11 percent to 28.8 billion DM in the first half, with foreign orders up 18 per-cent to 14.8 billion DM and domestic orders 4 percent higher at 14 above expectations, but he said that similar profit growth was not likely for the full year.

First-half earnings may have been boosted by extraordinary factors, including payment for com-pleted nuclear power stations, which are likely to be absent in the second half," said the analyst, who requested anonymity. "For the full year, we see profit growth of be-tween 30 and 40 percent to 1.4 to 1.5 billion DM from 1.07 billion last year." The analyst said Siemens' chief risk would be whether its planned multibillion-Deustche-mark investment in microchip technology ucts on schedule. He said Seimens's textile factories. performance outside core electronic operations also would weigh heavily on 1985 results.

Siemens shares rose 7.50 DM Friday to close at 535 DM on the Frankfurt Stock Exchange. Siemens shares consistently have been among the most traded in recent months, attracting strong foreign interest.

Siemens's managing board chair-man, Karlheinz Kaske, said in March that revenue for fiscal 1985 would be considerably more dependent on fluctuations in powerstation business. He said Siemens expected 10-percent growth in group revenue on the year.

West German Unemployment Fell in March

BONN — Unemployment in West Germany [ell last month as the weather improved after a particularly severe winter, but the number of people out of work remained higher than in April of last year, the Federal Labor Office said Friday.

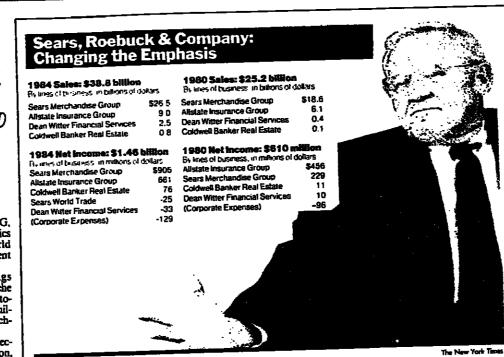

The jobless total fell to 2.30 million, or 9.3 percent of the work force, from 2.47 million or 10 percent in March, the office said. The total in April of last year was 2.25 million. Heinrich Franke of the labor office, said the figures showed that unemployment caused by one of the coldest winters in years was falling. During the worst of the bitter weather in January, unemploy-ment hit a post-war peak of 2.62 million, with jobs in the construction industry especially hard hit. The government has said that the jobless total should fall this year, but the country's five leading economic research institutes predicted this week that unemployment would rise in 1985.

Giant U.S. Retailer Sears Is Gambling That Even Bigger Will Be Far Better

Steven Greenhouse New York Times Service

CHICAGO - Sears, Roebuck & Co., long viewed as a stodgy giant, now is moving in so many new directions at once that it is almost dizzying.
On the financial side, the United States's largest retailer will introduce its long-awaited general purpose credit card, Discover, in Atlanta this fall, with nationwide distribution next year. It recently purchased a bank in Delaware and is negotiating to buy one in South Dakota.

It has installed 306 Sears Financial Network centers in its stores. These centers consist of three Sears subsidiaries: an Allstate insurance broker, a Dean Witter securities broker and a Coldwell Banker real estate broker.

On the retail side, Sears opened a small-scale test store in February in Alma, a central Michigan town of 10,000, and plans to open dozens of such stores throughout small-town America. This is a new market for the Chicago-based company.

TOKYO - Although officially still at war. South Korea and China are carrying out trade with an estimated value of up to $800 million annually. The exchanges are increasingly open, and they now extend beyond commerce to official contacts.

China and South Korea fought each other during the 1950-53 Korean war and have never officially made peace. But ships bearing the red star of the Chinese merchant marine can sometimes be seen at South Korean docks these days, no nil così and Varu

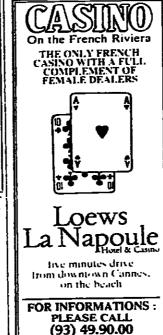

Across the Yellow Sea, South Korean vessels are frequent callers in ports on the China coast, bringing consumer goods that China is providing its people as part of modernization programs. Television sets, radios and textiles are common items.

The trade began in secrecy in the 1970s, often using Hong Kong middlemen and faked documents. Wraps are slowly coming off, and ships sometimes sail directly between the two countries, which are only about 200 miles (322 kilometers) apart.

Commerce has grown to the point that cargo routed through Hong Kong alone in the first 11 months of 1984 was worth at least 5300 million and estimates of the total for 1984 through all ports run as high as $800 million.

Trade has smoothed the way for government-to-government con-tacts. In the view of many analysts, the Beijing-Seoul thaw has helped raise chances for serious dialogue between the intensely hostile gov-ernments of North and South Korea, although few expect dramatic breakthroughs. South and North are to resume talks on family re-unions and economic cooperation this month.

Officials who run South Korea's export-fueled economy still routinely refuse to discuss the trade.

U.S. Jobless Rate Was Unchanged In April, at 7.3% By Jane Seaberry

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — The U.S. civilian unemployment rate in April was unchanged at 7.3 percent for the third consecutive month as the manufacturing sector continued to lose jobs because of the economic slowdown, the government report-

Jobs in the manufacturing industries declined by 45,000 in April. the Labor Department reported.
The total has dropped by 130,000 since January as economic growth slowed to a crawl during the first three months of the year and the influx of imports continued to displace domestic-made goods.

Overall, the number of employed declined by 174,000 in April, to 106.9 million, and the number of unemployed was unchanged at 8.4 million for the third consecutive month, according to a Labor De-partment survey of households. A separate survey of businesses showed that jobs increased by 217,000 last month. The unemployment picture has changed little since last fall and the unemployment rate has dropped only from 7.5 percent last May. Economists said Friday that the latest report confirmed predictions that the economy may be headed toward a "growth recession" --when too few jobs are created to prevent the memployment rate from rising.

The White House spokesman, Larry Speakes, disagreed, saying that "the nation's economy remains strong Despite the fact that the unemployment rate has not fallen in three months, we still see total employment in this country running at all-time highs."

Actually, employment was higher in March, with 107,1 million persons with jobs.

"We have some serious problems, clearly," said Janet L. Nor-wood, commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The unemployment rate rose for whites from 6.2 percent to 6.3 percent and the rate for blacks rose from 15.2 percent to 15.3 percent. The rate for Hispanics rose from 10.2 percent to 10.3 percent.

Dollar's Rally Continues In New York

NEW YORK - The dollar staged a powerful advance in light trading Friday, extending a rally in which it now has regained more than half the ground lost in a steep selloff earlier this year.

Even such usually bearish developments as a lackluster economic report and a decline in interest rates in the United States failed to halt the dollar's surge.

"The steamroller for the dollar is on its way and no one is going to stand in its way because it is shrug-ging off all negative news," said Albert Soria, a vice president at the

New York branch of Swiss Bank But traders now are viewing the slowdown "as a very temporary thing," said Jack Barbanel, a first vice president at Gruntal & Co. Inc., a New York investment firm. Mr. Barbanel said the British pound, which had gained the most

Standard Bank, Midland to Issue Perpetual FRNs

Reuters
LONDON — Standard Chartered Bank PLC is issuing $400 million of perpetual floating-rate capital notes, the lead manager, Credit Suisse-First Boston Ltd.

said Friday.

Midland Bank PLC said it plans to issue a perpetual floating-rate note, also ranking as primary capital, that will be similar to the note issued earlier this week by Lloyds Bank PLC. Donald Barron, the Midland chairman did not displace.

Midland chairman, did not disclose the size of his issue. Meanwhile. Lloyds Bank an-nounced that its issue had been increased for a second time, from $600 million to $750 million, because of strong demand. The issue was raised from $500 million shortly after its launching.

Credit Suisse-First Boston said the Standard Chartered note would use the mismatch structure, under which the coupon is refixed monthly but paid semiannually, to pay 1/8 percent above London Interbank's six-month rate. The notes, available in denominations of $10,000, will be listed in London.

They are callable at par after five.

They are callable at par after five years and have a minimum coupon of 5 percent. If the yield curve inverts, the coupon will be fixed at 1/16 percent above the London Interbank rate for the number of months remaining in the interest payment period.

French Industrial Prices Falls

PARIS — French industrial wholesale prices rose a provisional 0.3 percent in March after a downward revised 0.7-percent increase in February, the National Statistics Institute said Friday.

Crucial Changes

JAKARTA — The World Bank's annual review released Friday praised Indonesia for adjusting to lower oil prices, but said crucial economic changes were vital to avoid serious social problems.

The bank's confidential report said Indonesia's economy grew by 6.5 percent last year. But it forecast annual growth at under 4 percent for the next two years because of poor oil demand. Indonesia relies on oil and gas for 70 percent of its foreign exchange and the bank wants more industrial development to get the economy away from this dependency.

my away from this dependency.

The report urged contributing nations to at least match the $2.4 billion they committed to Indonesia last year. But it also called on the government of President Suharto to borrow cautiously on the world's capital markets to keep its high credit ratios. keep its high credit rating Unlike the overall debt structure of many developing nations. Indonesia's remained sound, the report said. Indonesia s remained billion at the end of 1984.

One of Indonesia's major challenges, the bank said, was to adjust its trade policies and stimulate the industrial sector to provide enough jobs for a rapidly growing labor force in the country of 160 million people.

It said a significant number of the 65 million workers were paid so little that their households lived in oursets.

lived in poverty. It noted that the work force would grow by 17 million people in the next "Meeting the employment challenge depends crucially on the skill" with which Jakarta "manages the transition from oil dependency to a more diversified, semi-industrialized econo-my," the report said. "There is a risk of serious employment problems emerging."

A Indonesian junior minister appointed to stimulate investment, Ginandjar Kartasasmita, recently warned a luncheon of foreign businessmen that if Jakarta fails to deal with unemployment "the consequences are frightening. We would face social-economic upheaval, regression rather than proportion updated in the desired that the consequences are frightening. sion rather than progression, and possible de-stabilization."

stabilization."

"Should such a situation arise, the consequences would be felt worldwide," Mr. Ginandjar said. "I do not think I need to elaborate further how awesome the implications are if we fail to maintain our stability and progress."

The World Bank said impressive gains had been made in the agricultural sector in 1984, with growth at 5 percent, Rice output rose by 7 percent, leading to self-sufficiency.

It said healthy foreign exchange reserves and a sound balance of payments indicated that Indonesia's austerity measures, including a devaluation and the delaying of billions of dollars of projects after oil prices fell in 1983, had worked.

The report said the adjustment had produced

The report said the adjustment had produced

The report said the adjustment had produced a decline in investment and sluggishness in construction and manufacturing. But these were outweighed by agricultural achievements and an increase in non-oil exports such as plywood and textiles.

The bank report said Indonesia's total public and private debt service ratio was 21.1 percent in 1984 and will peak at 24 percent in 1989 before declining to 22 percent by 1995. However, it said, the debt service ratio could peak at 26 percent in 1989 if oil prices weaken.

The report said a key achievement was cutting the current account deficit to around 2.4 percent of gross national product, compared with 8.5 percent the previous year. Inflation fell to 9 percent, compared with 12 percent in 1983.

Ethyl Reported to Offer Buyout Plan to Uniroyal

By John Crudele

NEW YORK - Uniroyal Inc.'s board has met in a special session to study a buyout offer from Ethyl Corp. according to Wall Street sources, but the negotiations be-tween the two chemical companies were said to have broken off.

The sources said that Uniroyal, a producer of tires and chemicals based in Middlebury, Connecticut, was studying alternatives, including a management-led leveraged

Neither Ethyl nor Uniroyal would comment

The Wall Street sources, who asked not to be identified, said that Ethyl was offering to pay $21 a share, or about $713 million, for the 33.95 million shares of Uniroyal, a company that recently claimed victory in a proxy fight with Carl C. Icahn, an investor. But they said the talks might have been scrittled when Ethyl became concerned about not being able to sell Uniroyal's tire busine to a third party. The sources said

Trafalgar Profit Increases 25%

United Press International LONDON - Trafalgar House PLC, which operates in property, construction, engineering, shipping, oil and gas, said Friday that profit rose 25 percent in the six months ending March 31. Trafalgar said profit was £57.4 million ($70.14 million) for the October-March period. compared with £45.9 million in the like period last year. Sales volume rose 34.6 percent to £944 million during the halfyear from £701 million last year, the company said. Trafalgar's chairman, Sir Nigel Broackes, said he regarded prospects for the full year as encouraging. But he warned of difficult conditions in the construction market, which makes up the largest part of the group's business in terms of the Uniroyal board met on Thurs-

would challenge, during a court hearing on Monday, Uniroyal's tal-ly of votes on two anti-takeover rendments to its bylaws.

He contended that 500,000 votes his companies filed against the proposals had been disallowed because of a technicality. If the votes were accepted, Mr. Icahn said, the measures would have been defeated.

The measures involved a stagger ing of directors' terms and a Tair Thursday that the final count rice" provision. Uniroyal said showed that 67.49 percent of the votes had been cast in favor of the board changes, and 67.85 percent favored the fair-price proposal. Each amendment had to win a twothirds majority to be enacted.

The anti-takeover moves came at a time when Mr. Icahn was accumulating his nearly 10 percent stake in Uniroyal. He later made a tender offer of $18 a share for enough stock to give him 50 percent of the company, but it was conditioned upon the defeat of the anti-takeover amendments. He planned to pay $18 worth of debt ecurities a share for the rest of Uniroyal, once he obtained con-

Uniroyal's stock closed Thurs day at $18,875 on the New York Stock Exchange, down 12.5 cents. Ethyl, based in Richmond, Virinia, closed at $20.25 per share on the NYSE, down 12.5 cents. Rumors have been circulating on Wall Street in recent weeks that despite the apparent success Uniroyal has had in fighting off Mr. Icahn, its management might still be interested in selling the compa-

The sources said that one possi ble alternative to an acquisition by an outsider was a leveraged buyout.

Japan Wage Increases Slow

The Associated Press TOKYO — The average wage of Japanese manufacturing and industrial workers last year rose 3.6 percent over 1983 levels, the second lowest increase in 16 years, according to a Labor Ministry report published Friday. It said the average worker earned a monthly wage of

Hitachi Signs Pact With China To Develop Computer Software

TOKYO — Hitachi Ltd., Japan's largest electronics company, has signed an agreement to jointly develop Chinese-language microcomouter software and to export personal computers for use by the Thinese government, it was reported Friday.

Under the agreement, reached with China's Research Institute of Railway Science, Hitachi engineers will work with the Chinese to develop the software by the end of July, the leading economic daily, Nihon Keizai Shimbun, said. Over the next two years, Hitachi will export 30,000 personal computers to the ministry of railways.

The ministry of railways, which has a work force of two million, will art using the computers and software in August, the newspaper said. Hitachi officials were unavailable for comment because it was a

This is Hitachi's first joint agreement with China on microcomputer exports, although Beijing already has ordered 97 large-size computers from Hitachi, the report said.

How Hutton Got Interest-Free Loans Interpreting

By James Sterngold
New York Times Service NEW YORK - Terms like "financial system" and "banking networks" typically conjure up images of a spaghetti of wires through which billions of dollars whiz in ultra-efficient electronic impulses. But as was demonstrated Thursday in the announcement that E.F. Hutton & Co. had pleaded guilty to 2,000 counts of wringing illegal profits out of its daily dealings with banks, the system is flawed to the degree that it provided the oppor-tunity to earn interest on somebody else's money. According to the Justice Department. Hutton used the system's inefficiencies to turn the task of col-lecting all of its branch income in one place into a way of illegally earning extra money. Of necessity, companies have developed extremely sophisticated methods for collecting and making the most efficient, and profitable, Lise of the often-huge amounts of cash that they process every day.

According to the Justice Department, Hutton's branches processed as much as $200 million a day.

The focus of these cash-management systems is to keep all avail-able funds invested, even if just overnight, to earn income until the nally published in The Village Voice, where Giddins is a staff writer, and other publications. The essays also discuss the musical atavism of the newest wave of jazz prodigies, the best-known of whom is the trumpeter Wynton Marsalis. "My intuition tells me that innovation isn't this generation's fate," Giddins writes, "[but] the neoclassicists have a task no less valuable than innovation: sustenance. . . . Musicians such as Marsalis are needed to restore order. replenish melody, revitalize the beat, loot the tradition for whatever works, and expand the audience. That way we'll be all the hungrier for the next incursion of genuine avant-gardists, whose business is to rile the mainstream and keep it honest." In addition, "Rhythm-a-ning" bears witness to the gradual ascendancy of the jazz composer — a paradoxical development for a music in which unfettered expression has come to be regarded as the improvising soloist's sacred right. "Jazz has always been a dialectic between improviser and composer: when the improviser gets out of hand, the composer emerges with new guidelines, sometimes borrowed from the distant past," Giddins muses in his introduction. He returns to the same thought in his remarks on the accomplishments of the pianist Anthony Davis, whose compositions for small ensembles are often entirely written out, leaving very little to the discretion of soloists. "Jazz is forever marked by quests for and away from compositional form." Giddins says, "but never as urgently as in the 20 years since the avant-garde violated the sanctity blues and song structures," These developments are open to interpretations other than those that Giddins offers. Marsalis's swift rise to prominence may be less an indication that jazz is marking time before the next upheaval than a sign that jazz can stand no more upheavals.

Be that as it may, one measure of this book's value is that the issues Giddins raises are so pertinent. It is all the more remarkable that such issues should surface in what is essentially a logbook of artist profiles and reviews rather than a book-length monograph. The author's ability to recognize and convey the historical and aesthetic subtleties surrounding a jazz performance makes "Rhythm-a-ning" (named for a Thelonious Monk composition) an indispensable guidebook to jazz in the 1980s.

As with Giddins's 1981 collection, "Riding on a Blue Note." one comes away from this volume and depth of his critical understanding. Refreshing-ly free of party ties, he is as knowledgeable and enthusiastic in his appreciation of the balladry of enthusiastic in his appreciation of the balladry of Frank Sinatra or Tony Bennett as of the free jazz of Cecil Taylor or the Art Ensemble of Chicago. The enduring legacies of Duke Ellington and Thelonious Monk, the recrudescence of hard bop, the fitful influence of Miles Davis, the link between Al Jolson and the late rhythm-and-blues singer Jackie Wilson, the impact of Ornette Coleman and his progeny, the emergence of a distinctly European school of big-band jazz — a partial listing of subjects covered in this book reveals the wide scope of his passions.

Francis Davis, a contributing editor of Musician magazine, is working on a book about younger jazz musicians. He wrote this review for The New York

Chief's Crown, Once Vulnerable, Pulls Away from the Pack to Become Derby Favorite

New York Times Service
LOUISVILLE, Kentucky — Last week, Chief's Crown looked like one of at least half a dozen colts with about equal chances of winning the 111th Kentucky Derby Saturday, and most of the racing world considered him a vulnera-

While the revisionist view of Chief's Crown is probably closer to the truth than the cloud of doubt under which he had raced until the Bine Grass, the Derby is still no walkover. What had looked like the worst crop of 3-year-olds in a decade is beginning to blossom, and Chief's Crown still has a few things to prove. He is bettable at odds of 9 to 5, but not unbeatable.

About the only people who were neither surprised nor impressed by Chief's Crown's Blue Grass were those closest to him, the trainer Roger Laurin and the jockey Donald MacBeth.

He went to the front to win a maiden race at Belmont by five lengths July 5. then won the two premier 2-year-old stakes at the Saratoga meeting, the Saratoga Special and the Hopeful. In both of those starts he came from slightly off the pace, turned in a strong late run and won going along.

He then went into the fall season, in which chamnionships are won and lost, as the premier 2-year-old in the East. His next start proved to be his only defeat in the past 10 months, but it was also the "With his breeding and the way he race that convinced Laurin just how good the colt might be. It was the Futurity at Belmont, and the track was sloppy. Chief's Crown broke sharply but then began dropping back steadily. MacBeth could tell that the colt hated the track.

"Then he began running, picking off those horses one by one like he didn't want to lose." MacBeth said. "It really showed a character."

The colt fell a length short of catching Spectacular Love, but he had been more impressive than ever before, and he has not lost since. He came back to drown a weak Cowdin field by six lengths.

Chief's Crown struggled a bit to win the Norfolk at Santa Anita, but was dead sharp for the Breeder's Cup race, bulling his way through a large field to score over Tank's Prospect and Spead A Buck, two Derby rivals.

He had never run an impressive time stronger, as if he were fitter and improvas the champion 2-year-old, but there 3. He had never run an impressive time and his one race around two turns, the Norfolk, had been his weakest.

There was also the virus in January. A filly in Laurin's barn who caught the Laurin said. "It wasn't a big jump up or away?

Laurin now thinks it may have been a blessing. Chief's Crown got a late start, delaying his debut until the Swale Stakes March 2, but he is coming into the Derby fresher than many of his rivals. Laurin thinks the colt is peaking at just the right

His races this year support that theory. In the Swale, he did not have to work hard to beat a moderate field going seven furlongs. He ran back four weeks later in the Flamingo. He was disqualified and placed second for possible interference in a call so controversial that the decision was reversed 10 days later. Then came the 11/2-mile Blue Grass, in

"It was about what we expected,"

The one thing he has missed this year is real competition or any adversity of any kind. Although all his victories last year were earned from off the pace, this year he has found himself on the lead without a straw in his path every time.

"That's just coincidence," Laurin said. "We never wanted the lead. When they stop running such slow fractions, we'll stop being on the lead. I can't see him being in front all the way Saturday."

That is indeed unlikely with one-dimensional front-runners such as Eternal Prince and Spend A Buck in the race. Chief's Crown figures to be slightly off their pace and then to make his move on

People talk about how horses could win by more if they were pressed, or how they do just barely enough to win. I don't buy the idea of horses figuring out the minimum they have to do to win and then doing

Veitch gets an argument on that score from Eddie Sweat, Chief's Crown's groom. Sweat knows a little about what it takes to win a Derby, having been the groom for Riva Ridge and Secretariat, who won the Derby in 1972 and 1973 while working for the trainer Lucien Laurin, Roger's father.

"This colt is no Secretariat." Sweat which the cort again went to the front, and instead of drifting and tiring he got stronger, as if he were fitter and improving. The time of 1:47 3/5 was only one-fifth off the track record.

Bird, who stung Detroit for 42 points in Game 2, did not make a field goal in the final period. His only points in the period came on a pair of free throws with 1:21 left the Celtics' last points.

Tyler, a 6-foot-7 reserve forward, made the Pistons' last eight baskets after scoring just two points in the first half and none in the third. Center Bill Laimbeer led Detroit with 27 points while guard Isiah Thomas scored 26 and guard John Long 20. Dennis Johnson led Boston with 27, including 15 in the third quarter. Bird had 25 and Kevin McHale 24.

Detroit doubled up on the ball when possible with fresh players to try to contain Bird. Tyler and Kelly Tripucka did a good job of fronting the Celtics' forward, keeping the ball from his hands.

Detroit, which broke from a 62-62 halftime tie and never trailed in the second half, led 98-96 entering the final quarter.

Château Coke, '85

WASHINGTON — There are only three great "Master told him.

Coca-Cola Tasters" in the world.
One is Beauregard Cokely from Marmaduke, Georgia. Beau has been producing and bottling the finest vintage Coca-Cola in the South for the lest 40 years.

Its honesty can't be questioned," I believe that 1985 could be one of the great vintage years for Coca-Cola. You would have to go back to the glorious reds of '31 and '35 to match this one for body and bourse! The sun South for the last 40 years.

His palate is so sensitive that I have seen him perform a blindfold test where he was able to distinguish between unmarked bottles of Coca-Cola, Dr. Pepper, Seven-Up and Miller's Lite its drink I sought out Beau to discover exactly what was going on. I found him in his famous Coke cellar at Château Lafite Atlanta with his wife and daughter. The three of them were hip deep in a large vat stomping on juicy red cola grapes in their bare feet.

Beau climbed out of the vat and greeted me warmly. Then he bent over, opened a spigot and poured some cola syrup into a tin cup. He sniffed it, sipped it, swilled it around in his mouth and spat it out, "Stomp a little harder," he yelled up to his wife. "It's not sweet

He handed me the cup. "What do you think?"

I tasted it and also spat. "It shows extraordinary promise, and one for body and bouquet. The sun has finally shone on Georgia."

"Is it true that after 99 years Coca-Cola has a new taste?" "We haven't changed the taste. We've improved its virility. In place of the light dry bubbly that has been our trademark, we're producing a mature, full-bodied, more disunctive cola."

He went over to a Coke case marked "1984." "Taste the difference between this and the '85," he I did. "Now that you mention it, the '84 does seem to lack breeding."

"Of course it lacks breeding. To give Coke back its nobility, we've made this year's vintage rounder, smoother and bolder. We're allowing the cola to mature in its sixpack a week longer and the bubbles to breathe in the can. We want our customers to be part of an entirely new soft-drink experience."

"Rumor has it that you are just pandering to the Pepsi generation," İ said.

Beau was furious, "It's an insult to mention Coke in the same breath with Pepsi-Cola. Pepsi consists of nothing but carbonated water, sug-ar, caramel color, phosphoric acid, caffeine, citric soid and natural flavorings. Coke, on the other hand, is the real thing. It will always be the pause that refreshes because every American knows things always go better with Coke."

Beau's wife and daughter were eaning over the side watching us. He looked up and yelled at them, "Who told you to stop stomping?" They went back to jumping up and I said, "Beau, could you tell me what the Coke formula is all about?"

"I'm sworn to secrecy." "All right, just nod your head if I'm right or wrong. Would it have anything to do with making the syrup with your bare feet?" Beau kicked me out through the cellar door. "What did you do that for?" I asked.

He said, "You're getting too close to the secret for comfort."

Vassar Gets McCarthy Papers — All 6,500 Pages

By Deirdre Carmody New York Times Service

D OUGHKEEPSIE, New York Folder after folder. Crammed in cardboard box atop cardboard box. Stashed row upon row. On shelf after shelf in the basement of the Vassar College

These are the papers of Mary McCarthy — novelist, essayist, journalist, critic and best-known member of the Vassar class of 1933 — that have just been acquired by the college. They contain more than 6.500 pages of typescripts, manuscripts, legal papers, galleys and notes.

The collection, which will be available to students and scholars when it has been cataloged, is a treasure trove for those who take their literature and their gossip seriously. It includes hundreds of personal letters from friends and writers like Robert Lowell, Hannah Arendt, Stephen Spender, So-nia Orwell, Dwight MacDonald and Elizabeth Hardwick, as well as correspondence and legal papers detailing McCarthy's stormy second marriage, to the critic Edmund Wilson.

A letter from McCarthy to Arendt, a close friend, shortly after the death of Arendt's husband, tells about a visit from Steohen Spender, who intimated that the poet W. H. Auden, an avowed homosexual, had just proposed marriage to Arendt.

"It is true," McCarthy said recently in a telephone interview from her home in Paris. "I think Auden was slightly put up to it by Stephen Spender. Hannah was absolutely devastated by this. She felt that he was asking her for shelter and that she could not do it. She felt that somehow it was an

McCarthy in Paris

In the folder marked "Correspondence With Edmund Wilson," who died in 1972, are three tiny pieces of paper: Written in pencil in her precise handwriting is McCarthy's note to Wilson telling him she is leaving him.

"Dear Edmund," she wrote.
"This is the note in the pincushion. I'm afraid I don't see what else there is to do. Perhaps the fighting is mostly my fault, but that's not a reason for our staying "I'm sorry," the note says at the end. "This could probably all be managed with less éclat, but the only way I can ever break off anything is to run away." It is signed "Mary." One folder contains reactions from Vassar alumnae to the 1963 novel "The Group," a fictional-ized account of the lives of some members of the class of 1933. A member of the class of 1917

"My head droops in shame, my pride is gone and I deny any asociation with my Alma Mater. The Group' is a catalogue of venery, a disgrace to the printed word and a blight on the reputation of a fine insultution. It will bring a vicarious thrill to the 'underprivileged' and an impetus to the oversexed." McCarthy's novels include "The Company She Keeps," "The Groves of Academe" and "A Charmed Life." Last year she received the National Medal for literature and the Edward Mac

Literature and the Edward Mac-

ing contribution to literature.

She said that over the years several institutions had approached her about donating her papers. At the time, authors were entitled to sizable tax deductions for donating their works to educational institutions, but she said that idea was repugnant to her.
"Why would someone like to give their papers during their lifetime?" she asked. "There's time enough when they're dead." But the tax law has been changed, and writers are no longer able to take such deductions. The result has been that colleges and universities usually have to pay to get the collections of proment people. When the president of Vassar, Virginia Smith, first approached McCarthy two years ago about acquiring her papers, the writer said she was "really strongly tempted, and then I have mice feelings about Vassar."

McCarthy and Smith both declined to say what Vassar was paying for the papers, but Smith emphasized that the cost was being financed by outside dona-tions, not the college budget.

She said the acquisition was in line with Vassar's tradition of having students deal with original source material whenever possible. She also made the point that with the increased use of word processors, on which mistakes can be deleted by pressing a key, there will no longer be first drafts with the cross-outs and revisions so dear to scholars. What will not be available in the collection for some years are the correspondence and legal papers about the lawsuit brought against McCarthy by the late playwright and memoirist Lillian Heliman. In an appearance on the Dick Cavett Show in 1980, Mc-Carthy called Hellman "a bad writer, overrated a dishonest writer." The suit had not reached trial before Heliman's death last year, but it polarized intellectuals.

Asked if she had anything to add about the Hellman suit, Mo-Carthy said she would rather not talk about it. Then she pansed and said, "I don't think the gossip about that woman will subside for a long time."

McCarthy, when asked what might be of particular interest in the papers in the collection, sug-gested a number of folders that a reporter might want to browse through Among these was the Edmund Wilson folder, which contains letters from their early courtship and during their mar-riage from 1938 to 1946. In the folder are also legal papers in con-nection with their separation and the custody of their son, Renel.

In a deposition taken Feb. 23, 1945, McCarthy, who was 17 years younger than Wilson,

"Before we were married he gave the appearance of a man of quiet habits with an interest in books, pictures and music. He was well known as a literary critic and I had admired his work even before I met him. During his courtship he held out great promise of a quiet settled life and the rearing of a large family. "Directly after our marriage I discovered that he was addicted to drink and our life together became a series of violent episodes. After I became pregnant he began beating me with his fists, he would kick me out of bed and again when I was on the floor. A short time before our son was born he knocked me down in the kitchen and kicked me in the stomach. At times he would hold me down on the bed and when I opened my mouth to scream he would hit me on the face and about the body. I was distraught and did not know what to do in my condition. Since the birth of our son I have tried to see this marriage through but from its inception to the present time I have been compelled to suffer physical and mental humiliation at the hands of the defendant. This has occurred in the presence of strangers, in the presence of friends, before our servants, the defendant's daughter by a former marriage and even before our son who is now 6 years old. He has publicly accused me of infidelity. He has made this accusation before our son.

An undated deposition from Wilson states:

"At no time did I ever attack her. I have found it necessary to protect myself against violent assaults by her in the course of which she would kick me, bite me, scratch me and maul me in any way she could. She has even gone so far as to break down a door to my study to get at me and she has on other occasions pushed paper under the door to my study and set fire to it.

"Plaintiff is the victim of hysterical delusions and has seemed for years to have a persecution complex as far as I am concerned. She seems to believe that I have attacked her and struck her on occasions when nothing of the sort has happened."

And in a letter, dated July 13, 1944, Wilson writes to McCarthy: "It may be that you and I are psychologically impossible for one another," and adds, "I have never wanted things to be as bad as that because I have really loved you more than any other woman and have felt closer to you than to any other human being.
